Falls From Barn Roof

Jacob Reiss, Aged 20, of Bakersville, Seriously Injured in Mishap on Guy Powell Farm Near Orange Monday

Falling from the top of a barn on the Guy Powell farm near Orange, Jacob Reiss, 20, of Bakersville, was terribly bruised about the body and rendered unconscious Monday morning. He was engaged in repairing the roof at the highest point, about 18 feet from the ground.

The injured man was carried into the Powell home where medical attention was summoned. An examination showed that although there were no bones broken he had alighted in such a way as to suffer internal injuries.

Was Repairing Roof

Reiss in company with several other men was repairing the roof. As he stood at one end of the gable his foot slipped and he fell eighteen feet to the ground. He alighted on his head and shoulders and was rendered unconscious

Expected to Recover

After being carried to the Powell home a physician was summoned and it required more than an hour to revive him. He complained of internal pains after being removed to his home in Bakersville. His back and neck were badly bruised by the fall but it is not thought that the injuries will prove fatal.

Hill Held on Charge of Trainriding

William Hill, who is wanted in Newcomerstown on the charge of having stolen an automobile last Friday night, is being held in the county jail on the charge of train riding. He will probably be arraigned before Squire Wimmer today and later taken to Newcomerstown.

Is Finally Captured by Police

Floyd Carroll, aged 24, was arrested Monday night on the charge of using profane language by Lieutenant Hankins and Officer Fretague.

About a week ago Carroll is said to have insulted Officer Fretague taking to his heels to avoid arrest. Monday night he was cornered by the two officers and will be arraigned before Mayor Cassingham this morning.

Horse Shoe Sent by Parcel Post

The fame of George Berton, well known local blacksmith, as an artist at turning out horse shoes of special design, has just brought him an order from an Indiana owner of a string or race horses. Mr. Berton sent the shoe by parcel post Monday.

Complain That Hunters Are Shooting Squirrels

Local members of the Coshocton County Game and Fish Protective association have received reports from several sections of the county within the past several days to the effect that squirrels are being shot.

One complaint comes from the West Lafayette-Plainfield vicinity and the other from north of Canal Lewisville. Every effort towards ferreting out the illegal hunters and bringing them to justice will be made by the association.

Mention Sen. Green for Lieutenant Governor

Columbus, O., June 2—It is probable that the appointment of a chief justice for the supreme court will be one of the places Governor Cox will fill this week. It is generally believed that Lieut Gov. Hugh L. Nichols of Batavia will get this choice plum, which pays a salary of $7500, the second highest within the gift of the state, the highest being that of governor who gets $10,000.

The elevation of Mr. Nichols will necessitate his resignation as lieutenant governor. Senator William Green of Coshocton, president pro tem and floor leader of the senate looks like a good guess for that place. He was a big help to the governor in getting through his progressive bills, and it is understood that the chief executive in appreciation of this, wants to put him in the office.

William Huffman Dies at Home in Virginia Tp.

William Huffman aged 84, died at his home in Virginia township Sunday night at 10 o'clock. Mr. Huffman had been in ill health for some time past and his death was not altogether unexpected.

Appeal to Citizens to Work on Streets

Roscoe Village Council Has Unique Plan by Which Highways May Be Improved

If the plans of the Roscoe council discussed at the meeting held last evening carry, the hill streets in that village will be improved before another week has passed. The village funds are somewhat depleted and under the new tax law there is at present no money available for use in the improvement of the roads.

For Camp Meeting

At the meeting of council held last evening Rev. R. F. Whitehurst asked that the body take some steps toward bettering the condition of the roads in preparation for the meeting of the Bethel camp meeting association late in June. In response to the request council asks that all citizens interested donate their services and that of teams and implements necessary for the work on next Friday and Saturday. If the citizens respond to the request of the village council "many hands will make light work" and better roads in Roscoe will be the result.

Aside from the matter of improving the village streets only routine business was transacted at the meeting of council.

Contracts to be Let by Board Today

Bids for the rebuilding of the super-structure of the Randles bridge which was washed away during the recent flood, will be opened by the county commissioners this afternoon. Other contracts will also be let this afternoon.

At the meeting Monday regular bills for the month were allowed and business of a routine nature transacted.

SICK LIST

The eight-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Noah Hardesty of Conesville is seriously ill.

Crop of Oats Is Growing on Back of Lynch's Ram

Galion, Ohio, May 31.—David Lynch, a farmer living near here, has a ram which, in addition to a fine coat of wool, has a covering of flourishing green oats.

The ram wallowed around in a straw stack and got oats in its wool. Then it was rained on. Next the sun shown brightly. This continued several days with the result that the oats sprouted.

Lynch calculates that in case of drought he can save this crop of oats, since if the rain don't come to it he can move it to the rain.

Has Tumor Removed from Nose

Mrs. James Murphy underwent an operation for the removal of a tumor from her nose Monday morning. Dr. Shaw performed the operation in his office.

Papa Fined On Charge of Assault

Alex Papa was arraigned before Squire Wimmer Monday on a warrant sworn out by Perry Stewart charging him with assault. Upon pleading guilty, Papa was fined $5 and the costs which he paid and was released.

Both parties live south of Coshocton and it is understood that following an argument several nights ago blows were struck.

Eloping Couple Wed in Kentucky

As man and wife, Harry Keagy 19 son of Mrs. Mary Keagy and Alma Tish 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tish of South Sixth street returned from Louisville, Ky., Monday night on Pennsy train No. 34. On account of the objections of the girl's parents the young couple, after planning for the past two months went to Kentucky to wed.

It is understood that the objections of the bride's father are so strenuous that upon the return of the couple Monday night he threatened to cause the arrest of the groom on the charge of abduction.

Upon returning the couple went to the home of the groom's mother in Clowville where they will make their home for the present.

Monday noon a telegram was received by the bride's parents stating that the marriage had been performed and that they were on their way back home. Mr. and Mrs. Tish had thought that their daughter was visiting friends near Conesville until they received the telegram.

Friday Miss Tish left home to spend Saturday at the home of a Miss Holdsworth near Conesville. Saturday she telephoned her parents that she would not be home on account of the rain. No further word was received from her until the telegram Monday noon Keagy went to Conesville Sunday where he met Miss Tish and they left for Kentucky.

For the past several months the bride has been employed at the Coshocton [illegible] Co. plant. She is well known to a large circle of friends who will be completely surprised [illegible] news of her marriage. The groom is employed at the Clow [illegible]

Mrs. Almira Dillon Dies Sunday at New Guilford

Mrs. Almira Dillon, aged 66, died at her home in New Guilford Sunday morning at 5 o'clock after an extended illness from dropsy. Mrs. Dillon was a native of Kentucky. For many years following her marriage she lived in Kentucky but after her husband's death as the result of a saw mill accident [illegible] years ago, she came with her family to New Guilford where she resided until the time of her death. She is survived by six daughters and one son.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday morning at Wilson chapel and burial will take place in Wilson chapel cemetery.

The "Present" Question Before Us.

"What in the world shall I give her?"

How many times have you said that as you read an invitation to a wedding or commencement.

Your dilemmas are no different from a thousand other people's. We are all in the same boat when it comes to deciding on a wedding or commencement present. It is a human failing for the imagination to balk at that point.

Next time you get an invitation don't cudgel your brains and confuse your mind with worry. It is a waste of time and takes away all the pleasure of giving. Just pick up THE TRIBUNE and run carefully through the advertisements. The first thing you know you will exclaim, "That's the very thing!"

There are many useful and beautiful articles, and there is no quicker way of choosing one that suits both your taste and your purse than to glance over the countless suggestions offered daily in our advertising columns.

Victim of Wreck Dies of Injuries

Frank Bretzius Passes Away in Akron Hospital Sunday-Body Brought to Coshocton for Burial

As a result of the terrible injuries sustained in an interurban wreck near Akron Friday morning, Frank Bretzius, 24, formerly of this city, died in the Akron city hospital Sunday morning. When the interurban car collided both his feet were amputated and he sustained serious internal injuries.

The body was brought to this city Monday night on the Wheeling train and taken to the home of Howard Crown, 654 Poplar street, from where funeral services will be held this afternoon at one o'clock.

Employed in Mill

Until three months ago Bretzius resided with his parents, Mr and Mrs. J. I. Bretzius on South Ninth street in this city. He removed to Cuyahoga Falls where he obtained employment in a rolling mill. When the accident occurred he was on his way to Cleveland to witness a base ball game. The car he was on, stopped on account of a broken trolley wire and another car following closely behind was going at such a terrific speed that a collision could not be avoided. Bretzius was standing on the rear end of the car but failed to see the danger in time to escape.

Was A Phythian

He was a member of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias and was well known to a large circle of friends in this city.

In addition to the parents, the victim is survived by five sisters and two brothers, Milo and Allen both residing in this city.

Funeral services will be in charge of the K. of P. lodge and interment will be made in the Prairie Chapel cemetery.

CLASS TO MEET

All members of class No. 7 of the M. P. Sunday school are requested to meet at the class room this afternoon at 12:30 o'clock to attend the funeral of Frank Bretzius formerly a member of the class, which will be held at one o'clock.

Glass Plant Will be Busy to August 1

The fires at the glass plant will be put out August 1, this year instead of July 1 as has been the custom previously. On account of the many big orders which still remain to be filled it is necessary to remain in operation an extra month this season.

Tennis Club Is Organized

At a meeting held last evening a tennis club was organized and within a few days the members expect to have a new court on the Stewart property at Second and Mulberry streets ready for the season. The members of the club are: Miss Jennie Stewart, Miss Dorothy Davis, Miss Mattie Hack Miss Grace Carr, Miss Nellie Severns, Miss Dorothy Davis, Mrs. Delva Metzler, Mrs. Jesse Robertson, Mrs. Rufus Arnold and Miss Jean Brown.

William Cunningham Dies Suddenly at Wakatomika

Arrangements for the funeral of William Cunningham, aged 66, well known farmer of the Wakitomika neighborhood who died very suddenly Monday, had not been completed last evening.

Mr. Cunningham had apparently been in the best of health Monday morning but before noon he was stricken with a stroke of paralysis which within a short time resulted fatally.

Mr. Cunningham is survived by his widow and nine children. The surviving children are Mrs. Anderson of Roscoe, Mrs. John Gillmore of Wakitomika, Pearl Cunningham of Tunnel Hill, Mrs. Hostetter of Coshocton, Harley Cunningham of Cooperdale, Alberta, Harrison, Earl and Merle Cunningham all of the home.

Becomes Dizzy and Falls from Porch, Breaking Hip

Miss Sarah Sample of Locust street sustained a broken left hip Monday morning when she fell from the back porch at her home. Miss Sample is unable to tell just how the accident happened but thinks that she became dizzy. Neighbors ran to her assistance and carried her into the house. A physician was summoned and Miss Sample was removed to Keenan's hospital where she will be cared for. The injury is considered a serious one.

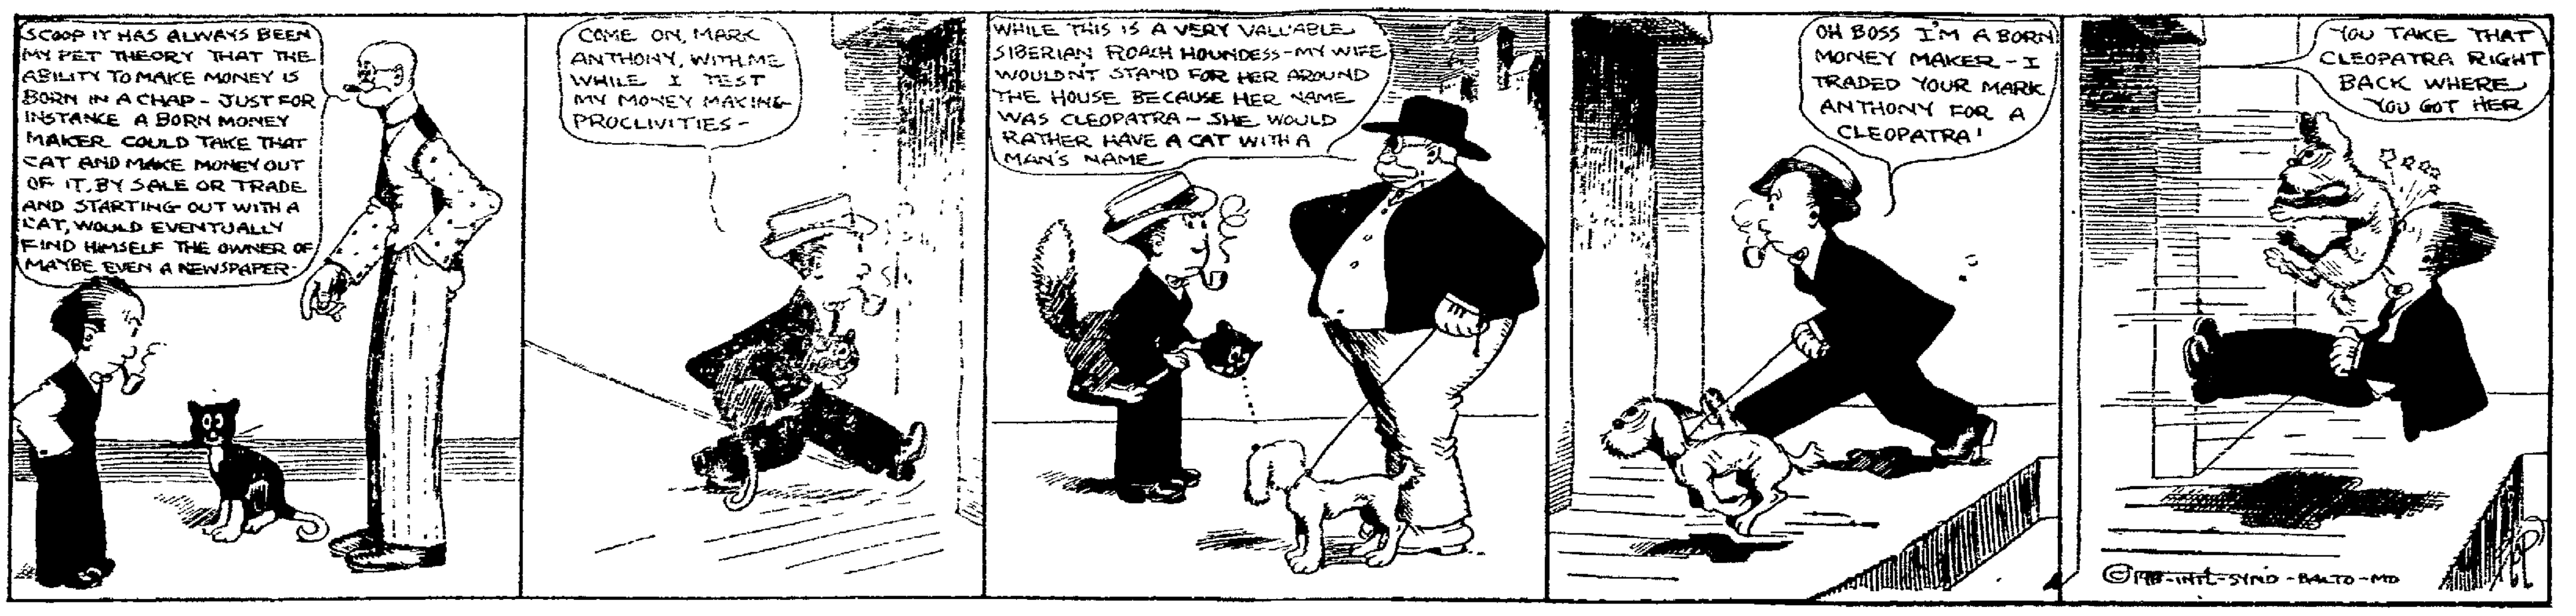

Miss Sample is a member of one of Coshocton's most prominent pioneer families, a daughter of the late Judge William Sample. She is herself well known and has a wide circle of friends who will regret to learn of the misfortune which has befallen her.

Farmer Is Found Senseless in Road

Elisha Huff, of the Fresno vicinity, sustained several bad bruises about the head and was rendered unconscious Monday morning when the horse he was riding stumbled and threw him to the ground. He was on his way to Fresno when the accident occurred.

Mr. Huff was found unconscious at the side of the road by Edward Norris who happened to be driving along the road in a buggy. The injured man was taken to the office of Dr. Kitsmiller where he was revived and later taken to his home. Monday night the victim was reported to be suffering a great deal. It is not thought that his injuries will prove fatal.

Martin Says Affairs In Ohio Valley Are In Good Shape.

Washington, June 2—E. S. Martin, special representative of the District of Columbia commissioners in the flood district of Ohio, who returned to Washington, states that the work of the Ohio flood relief commission and the Red Cross will not be completed for many months.

"Affairs are in pretty good shape throughout the Ohio valley, and the farmers are counting on good crops," he said. "If these come, well and good. If they fail there will be great distress. The condition in the farming districts must be watched closely by the relief organizations.

"It is likely that many farmers who now are able to get along, especially if the season's crops are large, may be hopelessly overwhelmed and be compelled to ask for assistance if there is a crop failure.

"The farmers who are taking the most chances are the wealthy ones. Most of the poorer ones have been assisted and provided for. The wealthier ones were determined to work out their own salvation."

Play Havoc In Market Gardens of Eastern Connecticut.

Plainfield, Conn., June 2—Eastern Connecticut farmers and truck gardeners are facing a perplexing proposition, owing to the ravages of millions of cutworms and tent caterpillars. No plant escapes the cutworms and grounds of all kind appear to be alive with them. They cut off the young shoots as soon as they appear above the ground. Potatoes and beans are almost completely destroyed. The tent caterpillar is here in millions also. In 24 hours after these pests leave their nests or tents every speck of fruit and green foliage is gone from the tree.

He resembles Kid Nichols, the former Boston star, in his delivery. Seaton also has unbounded confidence in himself, which is at least half the battle.

Others beside Lawrence Glass were apprehensive. Culver Covington, for instance, was plainly upset, while Roberta Keap pleaded headache and had her breakfast served in her room.

It was shortly afterward that she appeared in the gymnasium doorway and cried, in an accusing voice:

"Well, Mr. Speed!"

"Yes, quite well."

"You traitor!"

"You modern Borgia! Didn't you go and tell Helen everything?"

"Didn't you promise to stop Culver?"

"I did. I had him thrown in jail at Omaha. What more could I do?"

"You did try? Honestly?" Mrs Keap allowed her indignation to abate

"I Must Run—and Win. And Win I Shall!"

slightly. "If I had known that, I wouldn't have told Helen. I'm sorry you didn't explain. I was angry—furious. And I was frightened so!" She broke down suddenly. "What shall I do about them? I can see what they want to say, and yet I daren't let either speak a word."

"Mrs. Keap, are you sure Culver loves you?"

"Horribly! And he suspects the truth. I saw him change the moment he found me here." Roberta began to weep; two limpid tears stole down her cheeks, she groped for a chair, and Wally hastened to her assistance. As he supported her, she gave way completely and bowed her head upon his shoulder.

It was in perfect keeping with the luck of things that Miss Blake should enter at the moment. She had come with Jack and his sister to inquire regarding the fitness of her champion and to nerve him for the contest, and stood aghast. Chapin stepped forward with a look of suspicion, inquiring:

"What's going on here?"

Miss Blake spoke brightly, tinkling ice in her voice.

"There's no necessity for an explanation is there? It seems time for congratulations."

"Oh, see here now! Mrs. Keap's really engaged to Culver, you know."

"Culver!"

"Culver!"

Both the young ranchman and his sister stared at the chaperon with growing horror, while she undertook to explain; but the blow had fallen so swiftly that her words were incoherent, and in the midst of them her hostess turned and fled from the room.

"Now don't begin to aviate until you understand the truth," Speed continued. "While she's engaged to that broken-toed serpent, she doesn't love him, do you see?" He smiled.

"I do not see!"

"It was simply a habit Mrs. Keap had got into—I should say it was an impulsive engagement that she has repented of."

"No doubt she was repenting when we interrupted you," said Miss Blake, bitterly.

Then Chapin added, helplessly: "But Culver is engaged to my sister Jean!"

"Jean!" Mrs. Keap exposed her tragic face. "Then—he deceived me! Oh—h! What wretches men are!" The widow commenced to sob.

Outside came Miss Chapin's voice: "So here you are, Mr. Covington!" And the next moment she reappeared, dragging the crippled champion behind her. Thrusting him toward Roberta, she pouted: "There, Mrs. Keap! I give him back to you."

"Perhaps you'd better go on with your explanations," Chapin suggested, coldly, to Speed.

"How can I when you won't listen to me? Hear ye! Hear ye! Culver was engaged to marry Mrs. Keap, but she discovered what a reprobate he is—"

There was indistinguishable dissent of some sort from Mr. Covington.

"—and she learned to detest him!"

Mrs. Keap likewise dissented in accents muffled.

"Well, she would have learned to detest him in a short time, because she's in love with Jack Chapin; so she came to old Doctor Speed in her troubles, and he promised to fix it all up. Now I guess you four can do the rest of the explaining. If you ever get in trouble, come to the match-making kid. I'll square it."

They were four happy young people, and they lost no time in escaping elsewhere. When they had gone, their benefactor said to Miss Blake:

"Wouldn't you like to make that a triple wedding? We might get club rates."

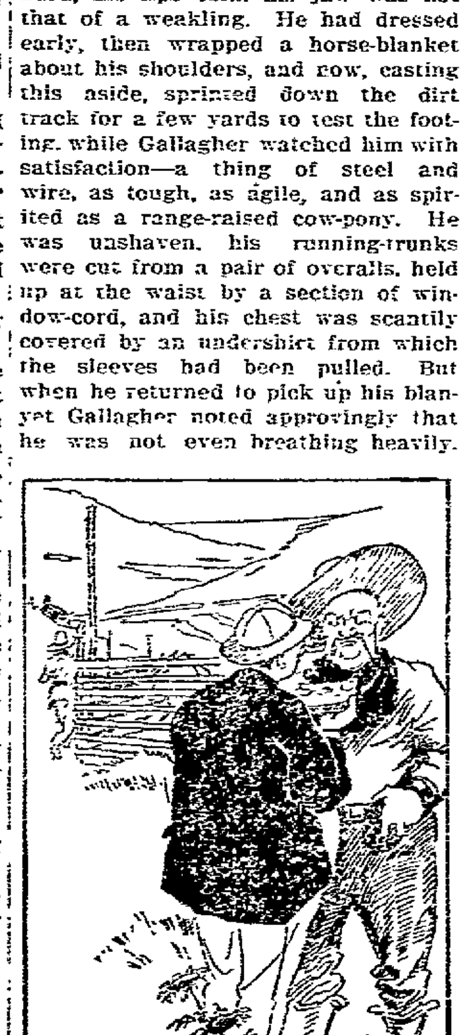

For answer Miss Blake hurried to the door and was gone.

Over at the Centipede there was a great activity and yet a certain idleness also, as if it had been a holiday. The men hung about in groups listening to the peripatetic phonograph. A dozen or more outsiders had ridden over from the post-office to witness the contest. Out by the corral, which stood close to the first break of the foothills, Skinner was superintending the laying out of a course, selecting a stretch of level ground worn smooth and hard by the tread of countless hoofs.

"Makes a pretty good track, eh?" he said to Gallagher. "I wonder how fast this feller is? Ever heard?"

"They seem to think he's a whirlin' ball of fire, but that don't worry you none, does it?" Gallagher bent his lead-blue eyes upon the cook, who shrugged carelessly, and Gallagher smiled; he was forced to admit that his man did not appear to be one easily frightened. Skinner's face was hard, his lips thin, his jaw was not that of a weakling. He had dressed early, then wrapped a horse-blanket about his shoulders, and now, casting this aside, sprinted down the dirt track for a few yards to test the footing, while Gallagher watched him with satisfaction—a thing of steel and wire, as tough, as agile, and as spirited as a range-raised cow-pony. He was unshaven, his running-trunks were cut from a pair of overalls, held up at the waist by a section of window-cord, and his chest was scantily covered by an undershirt from which the sleeves had been pulled. But when he returned to pick up his blanket Gallagher noted approvingly that he was not even breathing heavily.

"Bet This for Me, and Don't Let On Where It Comes From."

With a knowledge confined mainly to live-stock, the foreman inquired:

"How's your laigs? I like to see 'em hairy, that-a-way; it's a sign of stren'th. I bet this college boy is as pink as a maiden's palm! He don't look to me like he could run."

"They fool you sometimes," said Skinner. "By-the-way, what have you bet?"

"We laid the phonograph agin their treasures an' trappin's—"

"But how much money?"

"We got three hundred pesos down, but they sent word they was comin' loaded for b'ar, so we rustled five hundred more."

Skinner's eyes gleamed. "I wish I had a couple of hundred to bet on myself."

"Broke, eh?"

"I'm as clean as a hound's tooth."

"I'm sorry y'all tossed off your wages, but"—Gallagher started suspiciously—"say! I reckon that won't affect your runnin' none, will it?"

Skinner admitted that he could run best when he had something to run for. "You might advance me a month's wages," he reflected.

"I'll do it. Hello! Say, ain't that one of them Flyin' Heart city visitors?" From the direction of the ranch buildings Berkeley Fresno was approaching.

"Good-afternoon! You are Mr. Gallagher, I believe? I rode over with our crowd just now." Fresno looked back. "Let's step around to the other side of the corral; I want to talk to you?" He led the way; then inquired. "Is this your runner?"

"That's him. His name's Skinner, and that's a promisin' title to bet on." Gallagher slipped a roll of bank-notes from his pocket. "Unhook! I'll get you."

"No, no! I think myself Mr. Skinner will win. That's why I'm here."

"Strip your hand, son. I don't savvy."

And Fresno explained.

"You see, I'm a guest over there; but there's no sentiment with me in money matters." He produced a wallet, and took from it five one-hundred-dollar bills. "Bet this for me, and don't let on where it came from. I'll see you after the race. Mind you, not a word!"

"I'm dumb as the Egyptian Spinks."

"This race means a lot to me, Mr. Skinner." The guest of the Flying Heart Ranch turned to its enemy. "There's a girl in it. Understand?" The cook showed the gleam of his teeth. "If you win, I'll send you some wedding-cake and—a box of cigars."

THE PROBLEM OF THE SALARIED CLASSES.

The increase in the cost of living bears heavily on the salaried classes. The average man—and woman—working for a salary is an individualist pure and simple. He has nothing but his physical health and brain force to depend on.

The average workman belongs to a union and has in this a powerful instrument which he can wield to advantage when he asks for a raise in his pay. But the salaried employe hasn't the force of numbers to make his demand effective. In fact, he makes no demand in the sense that labor unions do.

He can only request and that in his individual capacity and in the vast majority of instances the request is ignored, often insolently. Take the example of one salaried class, the school teachers of the United States. We doubt if there has been any slump in the wages of teachers since, say, 1897. We are inclined to the belief that there has been on the whole an upward tendency in the pay of American teachers.

But it is questionable if the school teachers of America are receiving anything like a salary commensurate with the importance of their duties or their reasonable needs. It is doubtful if the average school teacher is able to invest materially in life insurance, real estate or anything else that will constitute a provision for a rainy day.

A teacher who got $600 in 1897 and is getting the same pay today, in reality, according to the United States Bureau of Education, is only getting $416. The one who received a salary of $1,000 then and the same nominal pay now is really only getting $693. In other words, the steady increase in the cost of living has operated directly as a cut in the pay of the salaried employe, whether in the counting room, the school room, the factory or any one of the hundreds of salaried vocations.

That this cut in the income has a direct bearing on the national morals no one can doubt. For instance, the average salaried man who could have married on the pay he was getting ten or twelve years ago has no incentive to establish a home today. Does any one see a direct connection between this and the tremendous spread of the social evil in recent years?

If the home is the bed rock of the nation isn't it time we were aiding instead of preventing the founding of homes? If our industrial system is driving men and women by the tens of thousands into illicit sexual relations, increasing enormously the relative number of cases of venereal diseases, decreasing the number of marriages and increasing the number of divorces to an appalling extent, isn't it time we are getting down to the root of conditions and doing what we can to apply a REAL remedy while we may?

We are creating wealth at an enormous pace. In the last half century perhaps [illegible] recorded past [illegible]. To all intents and purposes the problem of the creation of wealth [illegible] development awaits us in this line too.

But the real problem consists in a [illegible] and equitable distribution of the wealth [illegible]. And until this problem is solved the [illegible] exists in every civilized land today will [illegible] than less, aggravated. [illegible] between employer and [illegible] more [illegible] nations.

[illegible] the end of modern [illegible] in a given length of [illegible] the Declaration of [illegible] about [illegible] goes to pay dividends on [illegible] corporation companies and [illegible] or enterprises of a [illegible].

[illegible] sort of thing now. There [illegible] appeared before [illegible] years [illegible] with our tremendous creation [illegible] pauperism. Our system has been [illegible] man with too much money on [illegible] too little on the other.

Best [illegible] on the great middle classes that have the burden of supporting both thrust upon them. Undoubtedly, the great problem, not of the future, but of our own times, is that of returning to the real producers a greater share of the things they produce than they have ever had before.

Government Railroad In Alaska Is Nearer

"Immediate action should be taken by Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guarantee against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations or interests."

That is the declaration of the Democratic platform adopted last year at Baltimore. It does not lay down a program. It does call for "immediate action" and it states a general policy of preventing the exploitation of the natural resources of Alaska by trusts and monopolies.

Where Lane Stands

It now appears that government ownership of railways in Alaska is to be regarded by the new administration as the first step toward carrying out its Alaskan policy.

A week ago in a letter to Senator Pittman, chairman of the Committee on Territories, which now has under consideration bills providing for the construction by the national government of a railway system in Alaska, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane approved unreservedly the building and operating of railroads in Alaska by the government. He wrote:

"Government ownership of railroads in Alaska seems to me to be the one policy that will most certainly make for her lasting welfare.

"There is but one way to make any country a real part of the world. It is by the construction of railroads into it. This has been the heart of England's policy in Africa, of Russia's policy in western Asia, and is the prompting hope of the new movement in China. Whoever owns the railways of a country determines very largely the future of that country.

"I am convinced that we should think of Alaska as a land not only of mines and fisheries but of towns, farms, mills and factories, supporting millions of people of the hardiest and most wholesome of the race. If this conception of a possible Alaska is a true one, our legislation should be such as to most surely bring about this possibility, and it seems to me there is less of hazard as to Alaska's future if the government of the United States owns the railroads which will make its fertile interior valleys accessible from the coast and bring its coal, iron, copper and other mineral resources within the reach of the world.

"This is a new policy for the United States. Very true. This is a new part of the United States. And policies properly change with new conditions. The one determining question in all matters of government should be, 'What is the wise thing to do?'

"The ancient method of opening a country was to build wagon roads. The modern method is to build railroads. To build these railroads ourselves and control them may be an experiment, but such a plan does not suggest scandals more shameful or political conditions more unhealthy than many we have known in new portions of our country under private ownership.

"And in the end we will be free to establish and maintain our own chosen relationship between Alaska and the rest of the United States, unhampered by threats of confiscation or the restraining hand of any merely selfish influences. We can only secure the highest and fullest use of Alaska by making her railways wholly subordinate to her industrial and social life and needs, through public utilities.

"I favor the adoption of this policy. I believe it to be that under which Alaska will develop most safely and most speedily, and under which the resources of that territory will most certainly become available to the whole people."

A Progressive Plan

This declaration by Secretary Lane gives assurance that the new administration is setting out to support a program for the development of Alaska which will guarantee to that vast and exceedingly rich territory freedom from exploitation by private monopoly. And inasmuch as the Democratic platform specifically calls for "immediate action" by Congress it is reasonably certain that the administration will press for action early in the regular session.

In declaring for government railroads in Alaska, Secretary Lane is voicing the demand of all genuinely progressive citizens.

Back in 1910, the platform of the Republican party in Wisconsin contained these words:

"The situation of Alaska is exceptional. Transportation is the basis of control. It is the key to this vast territory of treasure. As exceptional conditions in Panama required the government of the United States to own and operate a railroad on the Isthmus in order to protect its interests and the interests of ship owners, so we hold that exceptional conditions in Alaska require that the federal government should construct, own and operate the railroads, docks and steamship lines necessary to the opening up of the Alaska coal field and other natural resources."

On August 19, 1911, Senator La Follette submitted to the Senate a resolution declaring "that it is the sense of the Senate that the government should own and operate all railroads, docks, wharves and terminals."

Steamships, Too!

The platform presented to the Republican National Convention at Chicago last June by the delegates from North Dakota and Wisconsin contained the following plank:

"Alaska contains untold wealth in coal, timber, copper, and other natural resources, for the upbuilding of industry and commerce and for the conquest of the markets of the Orient and South America. The government still has it in its power to save this vast storehouse of supplies from the interests which have monopolized the natural resources of the nation. Before the monopoly of the anthracite coal of Pennsylvania in the days of free competition, that coal sold at from $2.50 to $4.00 a ton at the seaboard. Independent producers were destroyed by discriminations and rebates and the oppressive methods exercised by monopoly of transportation. Today, 96 per cent. of the anthracite coal mines are owned and controlled by great railroads. The coal costs at the mouth of the mine, $1.84 per ton, and sells at the Atlantic seaboard at from $6.00 to $7.00 per ton.

"To preserve Alaska for all the people, to develop its untouched resources, we should adopt the plan so successfully carried through in Panama, where the government has built and now maintains a railway and Atlantic steamship line. We should utilize the Panama Commission, a highly trained, efficient body of men, which has mastered almost every conceivable engineering emergency, to build government owned and operated railways, terminals, docks, harbors, and to operate coal mines, to the end that the last remaining patrimony of the nation shall forever be free from the control of monopoly. We should own and operate a government line of steamships, running from Alaska by way of Pacific ports through the Panama Canal to New York, thus relieving the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard from the oppression of transcontinental lines. And we favor the immediate enactment of such legislation as will preserve this remaining heritage of the nation, and develop it for the benefit of all the people."

When President Taft made Walker L. Fisher his Secretary of the Interior the problem in Alaska was most acute. Mr. Fisher visited Alaska. And while he saw "no reason why the government should at this time take upon itself the unnecessary financial risks of supplying transportation" still he recognized the imperative need of railroads as the first step in the development of Alaska and declared that "if private interests do not care to undertake the task the government itself should do so."

A Correct First Step

There should be no further delay. The situation in Alaska is understood. The facts are known. Congress and the President have before them a most voluminous and exhaustive mass of data and information bearing upon existing conditions. They have before them, too, the experience of the state of Pennsylvania, for example—the most acute evidence of the folly of giving Transportation, the key to the situation, into the hands of private monopolies and exploiters.

Nor should Congress stop short of a thorough-going and really effective measure. Transportation is one element—and a most vital element—but there is also Industry. The vast untouched resources, mining and agricultural, must be developed—developed along lines of wise use and for public rather than private benefit. Settle the railroad and terminal problem right, but lay also the broad foundations of Equal Opportunity.

Progressives everywhere find in Secretary Lane's declaration for government railroads in Alaska an assurance that the new administration is headed in the right direction toward a solution of this great problem.

Pope Receives Congratulations.

Rome, June 2.—Innumerable messages of congratulation and good cheer poured into the vatican today on the occasion of the seventy-eighth birthday of Pope Pius X. Many of them came from the United States. His holiness spent the day quietly. He expressed profound thanks that he had recovered from his recent illness and said that he felt that he had many more years to live.

SENATE LOBBY PROBE BEGINS

Pay Dirt Is Struck Before First Witness Leaves Stand.

Washington, June 2.—The search for a tariff lobby such as President Wilson had declared was operating in Washington began today with the senate judiciary subcommittee holding open hearings.

It has been intimated that hundreds of men interested in manufacturing or other business affected by the tariff have been in Washington during the last few weeks and many senators claim it would be impossible to remember all the persons who have called upon them to make appeal for changes.

Before the investigating committee met Senators Overman and Reed went to the White House and had a long conference with President Wilson. Both declined to talk of their visit. The senators did not ask President Wilson to appear and it was generally regarded at the capitol and at the White House that the president would not.

Senator Ashurst was first called. He testified he was not interested directly or indirectly financially in the production, manufacture or sale of any article mentioned in the tariff bill or any other bill pending before congress, nor had he sought to influence any other senator.

Kept No Record.

The committee then made the first effort to secure a list or so-called "lobbyists" or persons who have "talked with senators" about the tariff bill. Senator Ashurst said he had not kept a record of those who had talked with him, but he was prepared to give the names of all he could remember.

The first was William Kettner of California, who had asked him to find out whether there would be any further reduction in the tariff on lemons and fruits. The senator asked Chairman Simmons of the finance committee and the latter said he thought the Underwood rates would stand.

"But I told him," said Senator Ashurst, "that I wanted it distinctly understood that in asking the question I was not urging that the tariff be not reduced."

Senator Ashurst said he did believe, however, that a "man named McMurray" had been attempting to influence improperly the action of the senators, with respect to preventing the cancellation of certain contracts he, "McMurray," held with Cherokee Indians for the sale of land whereby he would receive $3,500,000.

"He is the smoothest lobbyist I have ever seen," added the senator. "He could carry a bundle of eels upstairs without dropping a single one."

WILL CROSS OHIO.

Edward Weston Starts On Jaunt From New York to Minneapolis.

New York, June 2.—Edward Payson Weston, the long-distance pedestrian, who has twice crossed the continent afoot, started on a 1,500-mile tramp to Minneapolis. The 75-year-old walker expects to complete the journey in 60 days, excluding Sundays, and is due to arrive at Minneapolis Saturday, Aug. 4. He is to lay the cornerstone of Minneapolis Athletic club.

His route will take him through the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin. He will be accompanied by two assistants to provide for safety and comfort.

CORSET DEFLECTS BULLET.

Iowa Woman Owes Life to Steel In Rib Protector.

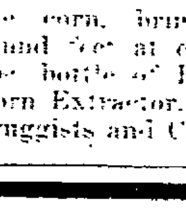

Mason City, Ia., June 2.—Mrs. Cora Prescott owes her life to the steel stay in her corset. She quarreled with Louis Prescott, her former husband. He drew a revolver and shot her, but the bullet struck the corset steel and was deflected, making only a slight flesh wound.

Cross Mother—"Those children are worrying the life out of me to bake them huckleberry pie. But I daren't do it. It nearly kills me trying to rub the stains out of their clothes, as well as the table linen."

Anty Drudge—"That's 'cos you don't wash the Fels-Naptha way. Let the children have all the pie that's good for 'em. Fels-Naptha Soap and cold water will remove the stains in a jiffy."

The value of Fels-Naptha Soap depends on how it is used. Fels-Naptha will wash clothes in cool or lukewarm water. Used that way it saves time, money, health and hard work. Your clothes will be cleaner, fresher and wear longer.

Don't insist on boiling and hard rubbing in the old-fashioned way. Fels-Naptha isn't made for that.

LADIES!

THINK OF IT

A Beautiful Complexion IN 5 MINUTES

If you are fortunate enough to have this ad. catch your eye, you'll be one of the happiest women in the world—for I will absolutely guarantee to give a beautiful complexion in 5 minutes WITHOUT COST TO YOU. In all the history of the world's toilette there is NEVER an offer like this, been such an offer as this—and the best of all is that YOU CAN TRY AND BE CONVINCED BEFORE you spend a single penny. Thousands of the finest Parisian society women are using this enameline.

Recently I visited Paris. I spent the last two years in Europe and during my travels I discovered an old Parisian physician making Face Enameline. I tried his preparation and was completely amazed at the results. I was delighted—I was thunderstruck—I could hardly believe my own eyes. From him I purchased the formula and I am sole control it throughout America.

Two months ago I gave out a few samples to my own friends of mine, and since that time I have been literally swamped with calls for this Parisian Face Enameline. Women have besieged me at such inconvenience to me to give them more of my preparation. Now a company has been formed to market this amazing Face Enameline, and I will make 50,000 women happy this month. You can be among them if you desire.

My Parisian Face Enameline covers birthmarks, moles, freckles, blotches, blackheads, large pores, liver spots. Absolutely no massaging necessary. Five minutes is the time needed to give you a perfect complexion. It can't rub off. Makes you beautiful immediately. Keeps your skin in exquisite condition. Put on fresh every day. Ladies carry it in their purse. It eradicates wrinkles—prevents chapping. Really it's the most amazing preparation in the whole world.

And in order to introduce it to American women I announce that upon receipt of five 2 cent stamps, to help pay packing, postage, time spent in wrapping, etc., I will send every lady a generous sample to carry in her purse. I know as soon as you have tried this Parisian Enameline, you will be wildly delighted. I tell you positively there's nothing like it in the whole world.

After you have received your package, let your lady friends try it. They will be amazed. I will mail a package to every lady that sends in five 2-cent stamps, or 10 cents in silver.

Dr. Headland Gives Talk on Missions

The congregation of Grace and Presbyterian churches met together Sunday morning at Grace church to hear the Rev. Dr. Isaac Headland who was for twenty-two years a missionary in China. Dr. Headland is a most eloquent and interesting talker and his address answered all arguments against foreign missions and proved conclusively to all who heard him that the greatest duty of the Christian nation is to "preach the gospel to all nations."

Coshocton audiences may rarely enjoyed the opportunity of hearing a man of Dr. Headland's ability and eloquence. At the conclusion of the address the audience responded with a generous offering for missions in China.

Dr. Headland is known as an able and a preacher a lecturer and one of the church's most efficient missionaries. Probably the secret of his wonderful power lies in the fact, that, according to his own statement Sunday, he thinks "the biggest business any man can be in is that of preaching the gospel."

BAD NEVINS

COPYRIGHTED 1911

by Charles Alden Seltzer

SHUFFLING down the long slope the drooping pony swerved a little, snorted, and then halted, trembling. Startled out of his unpleasant ruminations, his lips tensing over his teeth in a savage snarl, Nevins swayed in the saddle, caught himself, crouched, and swung his heavy pistols to an alert poise.

Ten feet in front of the pony, and squarely in the center of the trail, a gigantic diamond-back rattler swayed and warned. Nevins's snarl deepened, he dug a spur into the pony's left flank and pulled sharply upon the left rein. The pony lunged forward, swerved to the left, and came to its haunches as the reins suddenly tightened. Then the heavy revolver in Nevins's right hand roared spitefully; there was a sudden threshing in the dust of the trail, and the huge rattler shuddered into a sinuous, twisting heap—its head neatly severed.

"Man's size," declared Nevins, his snarl relaxing. "Git along, yuh durn fool! Scared of a rattler!"

Relieved, defiating its lungs with a tremendous heave, the pony gingerly returned to the trail. In thirty seconds it had resumed its drooping shuffle; in thirty seconds Nevins had returned to his unpleasant ruminations.

A mile up in the shimmering blue an eagle swam on slow wing, shaping his winding course toward the cottonwood clump that fringed the waters of the Purgatory River—five miles away. Besides the eagle, the pony and himself, there was no living thing in the valley. In the shade of a rock, perhaps, lurked a lizard; in the filmy mesquite that drooped and curled in the stifling heat crawled a rattler: in the shelter of the gray sage-brush a sage-hen nested her eggs in the hot sand. But these were fixtures. Nevins, his pony, and the eagle were not. The eagle was Mexican: it had swung its mile-wide circles many times to reach the point near the cottonwood; it was migratory and alert with the hunger lust. Nevins was not hungry. Back in Trinidad he had met a man who had treated him royally. There had been many words between them, and when they had parted the man had pressed a great roll of bills into Nevins's hand. There had been few words of instruction. But the man's voice had been hard. "His name is McVea. He's manager of the Bar Cross. There's two hundred in that roll I've given you. If McVea dies before the fall round-up, you get two hundred more."

That had been a week ago. Of the seven days five had been expended in a riotous "blow." Money had flown like water; terror had reigned in the saloons and on the street. Even the hardy men of Trinidad were admittedly relieved when one morning Nevins had awakened, dull-eyed and dazed, to look upon the last dollar of the two hundred. He had few friends. There were none who cared to become familiar enough with him to attain that personal eminence. Trinidad had known him long, and had come to the conclusion that a certain aloofness toward him was no waste of prudence. Therefore there was a concerted sigh of relief when, on the sixth morning, Nevins had quietly tossed his last dollar upon the bar of the Red Cloud Saloon, drank his whisky, and departed down the wide, sun-baked street in a cloud of dust.

II

The pony clattered down the slope, plunged deeply into the stream, and drank with eager, great draughts. Nevins swung himself crosswise in the saddle, fumbled for a moment at the slicker, and drew out a battered tin cup. Reaching over, he filled the cup with water, tilted his head back, and drank. A blur in the white sky caught his gaze and held it. His eyes smoked, his lips snarled.

"It's that damned greaser eagle!" he said. "Followed me fifty miles." A flash of pure hatred glinted in his eyes. "I wouldn't let no damned greaser eagle git me, anyway!"

The pony had drunk its fill. Nevins returned the cup to the slicker and swung back into the saddle. Refreshed, the pony took the opposite slope with a rush, emerging from the river bed upon a small plateau studded with fir-balsams and pines. Nevins halted and, rising stiffly from the saddle. Then he yawned, stretched his lithe, strong figure to its full height, and again fumbled at the slicker. This time he produced a razor, the tin cup, a shaving brush and a small mirror. He flung the reins over the pony's head, and allowed it to browse the dried river weeds that grew in the crevices of the rocks. Then he tied the mirror to one of the branches of a fir, so that it swung on a level with his face, descended to the river bed and filled the tin cup with water. Returning to the tree upon which he had hung the mirror, he mixed a lather with the shaving brush, the soap and the water. Then he looked upon the reflection of his face in the mirror. The snarl was gone. In its place had appeared a mocking, reluctant grin. One hand came involuntarily upward and sought his brown, luxuriant mustache. It had been his one solace in the long silence and the reaching distances. Curling it had been his chief occupation during these times.

"I reckon it's got to go," he said, "I ain't goin' to take any chancst on McVea knowin' me." His lips curled into a slow, unhumorous smile. "I shore wouldn't git no job if he knowed me."

Disposing of the mustache was a slow, laborious process. But it was off finally, and then he lathered his chin and shaved as close as the scraping razor would permit. When the task was completed he stood for a moment gazing into the mirror at the transformation. If he had not been positive of the fact, he would have doubted his own identity. The face that he knew had been skeptical, snarling, insolent. The face that now looked out at him from the glass was lean, strong, and clear cut—and rather more handsome than he cared to admit. Yet he was strangely pleased, for as he looked the hard lips loosened and a smile flashed back at him.

"I reckon that's a change!" he said. He reddened as he took a last glance into the glass—embarrassed over the contemplation of his own comeliness. "I reckon that nobody could tell that Bill Nevins had come here an' that Lon Dexter was goin'away."

Approaching his pony, he opened the slicker and deposited the tonsorial kit within. Then he rolled the cylinders of his two guns and hitched at the cartridge belt that sagged over his hips. For a moment he stood gazing into the shimmering, Western distance. Somewhere in that unfeatured waste was the straggling, adobe headquarters of the Bar Cross ranch—where he was to ask for a job. He smiled grimly, strode to his pony, and threw the reins over the saddle-horn.

"I reckon I'll be gittin' along."

The pony single-footed for an instant, reluctant to depart from the shade of the trees. Then the spurs rolled imperatively, and the animal broke into a slow canter.

Swinging around a sharp bend in the trail, the pony snorted with surprise and went back upon its haunches. As in the case of the rattler, Nevins tightened the reins and swung one of his heavy pistols to a poise, searching rapidly with his eyes for the cause.

"It's only me," said a passionless voice. "I don't think you need to shoot—I won't hurt you, I think."

Nevins flung his weapon back into the holster with a snap of disgust. Then he rested both hands upon the saddle-horn and gazed with drooping jaws at the apparition that had suddenly confronted him.

"Shucks! It's a woman!"

Framed in the dust-laden brush that skirted the trail was a young woman. The wide felt hat that set jauntily upon her head was covered with alkali dust; her riding skirt and boots were thick with it. Trouble swam deep in her eyes, and her lips were pressed firmly together to keep back some strong emotion.

But Nevins could not see this sign. He was too intent upon taking an inventory of the girl herself. And this task required only a brief instant. When it was completed Nevins was still gasping, and his composure had settled down into his bootlegs. He suddenly felt like bolting. Had he not been afraid of her laughter he would have done so. But a certain appeal in her eyes held him.

Bad man? It was not Nevins. Once, perhaps, he had been. Yesterday he knew himself as one—ironic, deliberate, sneering—reckless of life and law. It had slipped away. If there was anything of the bad man in this embarrassed, awkward, surprised puncher, whose wide eyes shone with a frank, unalloyed admiration, it was only a memory.

The young woman sat on a rock, her lips still tightly pressed, her eyes red and tear-stained. She was pale through the alkali dust. Nevins doffed his broad hat and bowed smilingly at her over his pony's mane. He was rewarded with a frown and a sharp rebuke from the tear-stained eyes. Her voice followed.

"If you are going to sit there and make faces at me, you might just as well go away!"

"Sorry, ma'am, but I reckon that meetin' up with a girl like you, sorta sudden, would make any man make faces. But I ain't tryin' to scare you."

Her glance was almost malign. "You wouldn't need to try. Just seeing you is enough." An expression of pain crossed her face. "If you are human, you might ask what has happened. Has it occurred to you that while you are sitting there, grinning and trying to say smart things, that I might be su-suf-fer-ing?" The pain in her face deepened; repression ceased, and she placed both hands over her lips to hold back the sobs that suddenly shook her.

And now a thrill of compassion shot through Nevins and brought him off his pony with businesslike rapidity. In an instant he was beside the girl, all traces of levity replaced by an expression of grave concern.

"What is it, ma'am? I'm sorry that I——"

"If you were you'd be doing something instead of talking about it!" Pain and impatience in her eyes made him burn with a guilty embarrassment.

"If you'll just tell me what I c'n do," he began in a gravely persuasive tone, "I shore do——"

"You might look at my ankle. It's sprained—or—or—broken. Crushed, perhaps. My pony fell and—and my ankle was under him. Oh-h!"

The exclamation, long-drawn and repressed, was caused by Nevins grasping her boot by the sole and heel and attempting to draw it off.

"It's swelled awful!" he stated in alarm. "How long have you been here?"

"I don't know . . . years, perhaps . . . it might be a century . . . I wish you would stop being silly!"

Nevins stood on one foot, his face drawn and distorted with impotent sympathy. "I expect I'll have to cut the boot off," he suggested, moved to a beautiful blush.

"Well?"

Nevins's hesitation was eloquent. "You see," he explained, gravely, "I ain't never had any experience——"

"Oh-h!" she groaned, "you don't need any experience, do you? Can't you see that all you need is a knife?" She dragged her skirts to the knee to prove it.

"I meant"—began Nevins, and stopped, horrified by the significance of the thing he was about to say. Very red of face, very awkward, and very carefully avoiding any unnecessary contact with the member upon which he was working, Nevins completed the destruction of the boot. Ten minutes later he had caught her pony, and was assisting her into the saddle. She had watched him rope the little animal, her eyes growing wide with admiration for his cleverness. And now, having done all he could to alleviate her suffering, he swung into his own saddle and prepared to depart.

"I reckon you'll git along now, ma'am," he said, facing her, half the length of a bridle rein between them.

The young lady turned her head and gazed into the Western distance. At exactly the same instant a pair of very muscular arms crushed her own to her sides and drew her far over. As she turned her head in fright the arms were raised, two hands caught her head, and Nevins's lips pressed hers—ruthlessly, roughly, brutally. She struggled frantically to free herself, striking his hands, beating him in the face with her fists. And then it was done and he was gone, his pony clattering in a flying gallop ahead of her. When he had gone a hundred yards, he halted, standing in his stirrups.

"I RECKON IT'S GOT TO GO," HE SAID . . . T GOIN' TO TAKE ANY CHANCST ON MCVEA KNOWIN' ME."

"I reckon we're square now, ma'am," he yelled. "It was mean of me, I know, to take advantage that-a-way. But you hadn't ought to be so durn good-lookin'."

Another clatter, a word of parting, and he was off in a ballooning dust cloud.

Bitterly had the cook complained to the range boss over the addition to the outfit. But he had hinted nothing to the addition himself. That, all things considered, was a delicate business—and the cook was not a meddler. Yet with the added labor of cooking for an extra man, he could not forego the tense observation—expressed privately to himself—that the way McVea shoved extra men "onto him" was a "damned outrage." Yet, as before stated, he hinted nothing of this to the new man; a certain intuitive suspicion that his remarks would not be well received by the aforementioned new man helped him remarkably in accepting the inevitable. He never did "cotton" to men who "toted" two guns.

It became an irritation to him that the other men of the outfit had adopted the new man. They had admitted him to the campfire fellowship; they gambled with him; they laughed over his dry humor. In his presence they told many tales of personal adventure; drew glowing word pictures of past experiences, garnished with queer idioms and picturesque dialect revealing glimpses of the past, illuminating flashes of information concerning themselves that, had a pen asked, would have produced a pistol.

Yet through it all they got very little from the new man. His name was Lon Dexter; he was from Wyoming. McVea had promised him steady work. That was all. It was all that he had said; it was all the outfit could expect.

The cook was curiously unsatisfied. He had watched Dexter with a perseverance that merited a reward. Yet he had discovered nothing. There was a certain peculiarity of figure and movement that puzzled him. Somewhere back in the years he had seen this man. But like a song that lingers, half forgotten, he could not summon the recollection into the present. The undulating walk, the slow chosen, deliberate words, the drawl, the flashes of cold insolence, the threat of slumbering violence that lurked about him, the voice, the carriage of the head and the slight droop of the shoulders—all combined to produce a man he had once known, but who had passed into the yesterday of his mind.

Something of all this he placed in concise words close to the ear of "San José," one-time gambler and card sharp, whose eyes glowed cunningly in his silences, and who had departed New Mexico between two days—preceding by a scant hour a sheriff who had not been very anxious to get near him. San José acknowledged to feeling something of the same baffling uncertainty.

"He'm not a stranger," he said with much decision, "an' he play slick han' at poker, dama he'm!"

"I ain't just hankerin' to arger the thing with him," declared the cook; "me an' him c'n git along without gittin' any thicker than we've bin. There's somethin' about the cuss makes me think of 'Bad' Nevins, over at Trinidad. An', if Dexter is him, I ain't takin' any chances——! What's up?"

San José had drawn his breath sharply. Looking closely at him, the cook saw his lips settle into hard lines; saw his eyes glint with a curious mingling of hatred and triumph.

"Know him?" he questioned.

"No!" San José turned abruptly and strode to the other side of the chuck wagon.

"Shucks! Now what do you think of that?" observed the cook in an aggrieved tone. "What did I say to make him huff up that-a-way?"

IV

High up over Purgatory Valley, a Mexican eagle circled, looking alertly down upon the earth—shrunk to map size—spreading away beneath him. For a moment the eagle floated motionless over the valley, for in the vast, vacant space something had moved. In the north he saw Nevins, moving down along the brush of the river trail; the pony loping evenly, Nevins swinging easily in the saddle. Half a mile behind Nevins rode San José. Unlike Nevins, San José did not bestride his pony easily, for at times he stood in the stirrups, halting the pony and peering ahead at Nevins's back. Then there were times when he leaned far over his pony's mane and rode with the speed of the whirlwind. Always this occurred when Nevins was out of sight behind a swell. With Nevins in sight San José held in his pony.

Over into the West there was also movement. From near the cluster of Bar Cross buildings a pony had appeared, ridden by the Bar Cross manager. His course lay exactly at right angles with that of Nevins and San José. If Nevins and McVea held the pace they were going they would meet in a draw about a mile from the river. McVea came on steadily, his pony swinging in a sharp canter. Five minutes after he had left the cluster of buildings, Miss McVea departed to follow him. She rode with more effort, but her pony came faster. Watching five minutes, the eagle fluttered its wings, mounted higher toward the blue that yawned above him, and departed upon beating wings into the Eastern distance.

But the riders still came on. In ten minutes Nevins entered the draw, pulling up with sharp rein as McVea entered from the opposite end. They met near the center, the high, sloping banks of the draw hiding them completely from the gaze of the other riders—as they hid Miss McVea and San José from each other. Hard words passed between McVea and his puncher. While he talked San José cautiously approached the northern slope of the draw, dismounted, and crept carefully up until he commanded a view of the other riders. An eighth of a mile out on the plain Miss McVea came, riding steadily.

For an instant the scene remained unchanged. Nevins had spurred close to McVea, his body was partly shielded from San José by the manager's. Then from the crest of the slope above the draw came a flash and a dull report. McVea reeled in his saddle, grasped blindly for the saddle horn, missed it, and then slipped down beside his pony's legs.

Followed an infinitesimal space—no man could have estimated it. Then from Nevins's side came two flashes—so rapidly that the reports blended. San José stiffened out on the slope of the draw and became motionless. At exactly the same instant Miss McVea entered the draw from the West. Nevins sat on his pony, the smoking pistol still in his hand. Flat upon his back in the hot sand of the draw lay McVea, his face upturned.

Miss McVea's gaze had taken in both these grave details in a flash. As she halted her pony within ten feet of Nevins her face was very pale and her lips hard.

"You?" she said to Nevins—"You!"

"I reckon it's me," admitted Nevins; "at least, I think so. I've just shot——"

"My father!" said the young lady grimly.

From her side came a flash and a sharp report. The ivory-handled .38 poised for an emergency. But it was unnecessary preparation.

Nevins started, swayed, and crumpled up under his pony's legs.

V

The first thing that Nevins saw after regaining consciousness was the lace curtain fluttering in the breeze that swept cool from the mountains. Unaccustomed to such luxuries, he tried to sit erect to get his bearings. A sudden twinge of pain in his right side warned him, and he sank back, puzzled. Something had happened. It was some time before he remembered. Then in spite of the pain, he smiled a very little.

"I reckon she was holdin' that kissin' ag'in' me," he muttered. "She's cert'nly clean grit."

Something moved over near a corner and Nevins again raised his head. Miss McVea, seated beside a small table, sewing, arose and stepped over to his bedside.

"Feeling better?"

"I reckon. Soit's you. How did I git here?"

"The boys brought you."

Nevins leaned back and sighed. It was all very clear now.

"How's your Dad?" he questioned.

"Dad's working around the corral," she said coldly; "your bullet just creased his forehead."

Nevins grinned wearily. "My bullet?" he said quietly. "I reckon there must be some mistake; my bullet didn't miss."

"No," she said, "it didn't miss. But it didn't do what you expected it to do." Her tone was icy, and very unhumorous.

"I expect yours didn't do what you expected it to do either."

"No," she flushed with anger. "You have done two things. For each you should have been killed. How you have escaped is a mystery. The boys wanted to hang you at once, but I succeeded in having you brought here."

"Why?" he questioned.

"You would have died," she returned quietly.

"Well?" A smile fluttered on his lips. "You said I ought to have been killed. There was your chance. Why didn't you take it?"

"I am not bloodthirsty!" she answered sharply.

"I expect that's the reason you shot me," he returned quietly.

She drew herself up coldly. "You are insolent," she said. "You deserved to die for what you did out there on the Purgatory. I don't know why I didn't let the boys hang you. I am not so sure that I wouldn't have allowed them if your bullet had killed my father."

To her surprise Nevins laughed.

"I reckon there's a mix-up," he said. "You've been thinkin' things that you hadn't ought to have thought. Something happened to me back in New Mexico that brought affairs here to a focus sooner than I expected. Back in New Mexico I had some trouble with a man named San José. Have you thought to see if San José is still at the Bar Cross?"

"He isn't," she said. "Dad told me yesterday that San José had left the ranch without asking for his time."

Nevins smiled grimly. "If you'll take the trouble to have one of the boys take a look around the slope of that draw where the shootin' was done, you'll find why San José ain't showed up. I knowed him right along," he continued, "an' I saw him follow in' me that day. He wanted to git me with that bullet, but he missed an' got your father. Then I shot him. I reckon he's still on top of the draw."

And then, seeing her surprise, he smiled wearily and lay back on the pillow.

VI

She had come and told him that they had found San José. After this discovery there had been a change of sentiment toward him. McVea had come in to shake his hand, and Miss McVea had been very attentive, very gentle. Often he wondered what her action would have been if she knew that on the day of the shooting he had been journeying to the ranch house for the purpose of goading her father into a quarrel. He had almost succeeded when San José's bullet had put an end to the affair. She did not know that she was harboring a serpent.

There were times when he was sure that the anger was not very deep in her eyes when she was looking at him. Words passed between them; one afternoon she had read to him from the Bible. "Thou shalt not kill" had been the text. She had dwelt long upon this, and had shown him many things that he had not suspected. It had made him feel very small, very impotent. He had been greatly impressed. And to-day she was reading again.

"Do you think that guy was on the level?" he asked abruptly, during a pause.

"Do you mean if he was in earnest?"

"I reckon that's what I meant," he returned flushing.

"Why, yes. He had no reason to be otherwise. He was as earnest in his task of saving souls as you are in punching cows—and killing people."

"Then I reckon he was goin' some."

She turned to hide a smile. "You have been a consistent breaker of the commandments," she said. "The cook came here one day while you were unconscious, and told us about you."

"I reckon that cook must know a lot," he said, sneering.

"He said your name is Nevins. That you are a gunfighter. A bad man. That you have killed people. Have you?"

"I reckon I never shot a man unless he was lookin' for it as much as I was. This is the first time I ever hired out to—to——"

"To what?"

"To be preached at by a woman."

"But you are listening."

He smiled, waving his hands toward the bed upon which he was lying. "I reckon I've got to. You've got me foul." He looked at her, his eyes showing his pleasure at being her prisoner. "You ain't told me why you had me brought in here," he said, looking searchingly at her; "you said I ought to have been killed for kissin' you. I ain't sayin' that I oughtn't to. But is that the way to keep that guy's word—that guy who told you about 'Thou shalt not kill?'"

She turned her head and the red came into both her cheeks.

"I ain't sorry that I made you want to break one of them commandments," he said presently; "there ain't any good in lyin' about a thing."

She looked up, startled, but smiling.

"I wish I was like that guy," he said, "I reckon I've been some bad in my time." He dropped his hands to the coverlet, closing his eyes. Presently he felt her fingers touch his hand. He opened his eyes and found her looking down into them.

"No one is entirely bad," she said, softly; "there is much good in the worst of us. Only time and opportunity are lacking to bring it out."

"I reckon I'm goin' to be good," he said, slowly. "Do you think it's any use?"

She sank down beside him, smiling at him.

"I'll help you," she said, gently.

Sausage By Parcel Post

A reference to the want columns of the big dailes these days brings a knowledge of how the parcel post is producing ideas. A unique offer is that of a certain farmer's wife living a few miles from one of the big cities, who has begun advertising in the want columns, which interest women. She will send farm made sausage in one pound or ten pound lots, as desired, by parcel post. The offer is attractive, the idea suggestive, not only to farmers' wives, but to city women who may be able to produce some article which can be sold by advertising in their local papers.

Buckeyes Again Trim the Barbers

By a margin of 69 pins the Buckeyes again defeated the Barbers in a match game of ten pins on the Wisenburg and Corder alleys Monday night. In the first game the clothing store aggregation showed poor form and the tonsorial artists won by a margin of 27 pins. However, Dilts and his men came to the front on the last two overcoming the lead and securing a nice margin over their opponents.

The Buckeyes now claim the city championship and offer to defend the title against all comers. The score:

FORMER BOSS GOES ON TRIAL

Cox and Others Charged With Violating Banking Laws.

Cincinnati, O., June 3—The trial of George B. Cox, financier and former political leader and four other directors and officers of the Cincinnati Trust company on the indictment charging them with violation of the banking laws, was begun in the criminal court here. The other men on trial with Cox are Nathaniel S. Keith Fletcher R. Williams, C. V. Parrish and Charles H. Davis. A plea of not guilty was entered by each man.

Nine of the directors and officers of the trust company were indicted on the charge, but one of them, Dr James Heady, was ill and will be given a separate trial. The other three James M. Hutton, David G. Edwards and James M. Crawford, requested that they be tried separately.

The charge in the indictment is that these officers and directors signed a joint note for $552,500 in favor of the bank in 1911, upon the demand of the state banking department, to prevent the bank from going to the wall and that later they falsely marked the note as "paid" upon the books of the bank and destroyed it, whereas the note had not been paid.

SPRINGS PEACE PROGRAM.

Senator Wants Dreadnoughts to Advertise American Products.

Washington, June 2.—From an Arkansas statesman comes the latest plan of the peace advocated for the disposition of the United States battleships now afloat. Representative Goodwin of Arkansas wants to have every warship loaded down with goods of American manufacture and sent to foreign ports as a traveling exposition of American wares. He will introduce a bill in congress to accomplish his purpose. Mr. Goodwin is a peace advocate of the first water. He is for complete disarmament first last and all the time.

Mr. Goodwin said: "I am opposed to senseless multiplication of useless battleships, yet I see no reason why these we have built at so great an expense should not be used in advancing American trade before they rot and become junk. Our strength does not lie in battleships and dread nought so much as in our legislation, the absence of entangling alliances and our peaceful pursuits. All peoples are looking to the United States for the first step toward disarmament."

LABOR UNREST GROWS.

English Tailers Strike to Secure Minimum Wage Law.

London, June 2.—Labor unrest throughout England is becoming acute. Leaders of various trades unions are denouncing the government for not passing a minimum wage bill affecting all industries and a national walkout may be the outcome. Between 30,000 and 40,000 workmen are idle.

On Wednesday representatives of shipyard workers will meet and a strike may be ordered. Eight hundred lightermen employed on Mersey river have gone on strike. Two thousand men and women bricklayers at Dudley gave notice of a strike. Six hundred employes of the Midland Carriage company and 300 electrical workers struck at Witland today.

POET LAUREATE DIES.

Alfred Austin Dedicated Poem to Colonel Roosevelt.

London, June 2.—Alfred Austin, British poet laureate since 1896, died today at the age of 77.

Austin was born near Leeds, graduated at the University of London in 1853 and was admitted to the bar in 1857. He became editor of the National Review in 1883.

Among his poems are "The Season," "English Lyrics," "Songs of England," and "A Tale of True Love," and other poems, dedicated to Colonel Roosevelt.

His essay, "The Poetry of the Period," issued in 1870, in which he criticised Tennyson, Browning and other Victorian poets, attracted much attention.

TRUST BREAKS RECORD.

Will Have 1,200 Witnesses In Harvester Hearing at Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, June 2 The International Harvester company has furnished the government with the names of more than 1,200 defense witnesses—said to be a world's record—in the hearings against the company which opened here this afternoon as a part of the country-wide investigation into alleged violations of the Sherman act.

The government has called 80 witnesses. The hearings are held before Robert S Taylor of Duluth, special examiner.

Spanish Cabinet Reappointed.

Madrid, June 2.—After several consultations with political leaders, King Alfonso asked Conde de Romanones, who submitted his resignation and that of the cabinet several days ago, to form a new cabinet. The premier accepted and reappointed all his colleagues to the same posts.

Mrs. Kanavel Passes Away in Cleveland

The Coshocton friends of C. E. Kanavel formerly of this city but now of Cleveland will regret to learn of the death of his wife which occurred Thursday last at St. Alexis hospital, Cleveland.

The body was taken to Zanesville, Mrs. Kanavel's former home, where burial took place.

Mr. Kanavel was for five years teacher in the West Carlisle schools and is well known over the county.

Unknown Man Would Suicide

After attempting twice to take his life an unknown man was taken from the top of the Newcomerstown bridge Sunday afternoon by pedestrians who saw him lying on a steel beam. The man was mentally deranged and when taken from the beam a heavy rope was found tied around his neck and to the steel girder. Later he stated that he had lain down on the girder thinking that he would go to sleep and roll off and in this way break his neck.

Sunday morning he was seen taking a razor from his pocket and make a motion as though to cut his throat. He stated later that something told him not to die in this manner. Shortly after being seen with the razor he obtained a revolver and placing the muzzle to his temple was about to blow his brains out when again the warning voice told him not to. The demented man was taken to the Newcomerstown prison after being rescued from the bridge girder and every effort is being made to learn his identity.

$20 Stolen from Home in Country

The home of Mr. and Mrs. William Sissley near Conesville, was entered Saturday night or Sunday morning and cash to the amount of $20 was taken. There is a strong clue as to the guilty persons and the authorities in this city were notified Monday morning. Arrests are expected to be made soon in connection with the case.

Seeks to Check Immigration.

Washington, June 2.—In the bill introduced in the senate today by Senator Dillingham, chairman of the former immigration commission and joint author of the Burnett-Dillingham bill, vetoed by President Taft, an attempt is made to limit immigration from southern European and Asiatic countries without the use of the literacy test.

Grasped Live Wire.

Ithaca, N. Y., June 2.—While picking daisies in a field not far from his home, James Reynolds, the 8-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Reynolds of Wood street, was instantly killed when he grabbed the end of a live wire which hung down from a telephone pole and stretched out into the field.

Firemen Recover Bodies.

Chicago, June 2.—Firemen donned helmets and climbing down the shaft of an old well 30 feet deep recovered the bodies of four men who were overcome by gas and lost their lives in a search for 5-year-old Olga Parza of Chicago Heights.

Remove Cannon From Lad's Stomach

Chicago, June 2.—Physicians removed a toy cannon from the stomach of Coleman O'Shaughnessey three years old, who swallowed it while celebrating Memorial day. The cannon was one and a half inches long. Neither the child nor the toy is any the worse for the experience.

Charged With Murder.

Eaton, O., June 2.—Elwood Davis, 40, farmhand, is under arrest on the charge of murdering Frank Bourne, 60, a well-to-do farmer, who lived near Camden, and who has been mysteriously missing for a year. The affidavit against Davis was filed by John E Bourne, cousin of the missing man.

Juniors Hold Busy Meet

Thirty members of the junior class held a meeting last evening at the home of Miss Sara Meek on Chestnut street. The session was a busy one but the business chiefly concerned the class members only.

Miss Palm Invited to Give Talk

At the invitation of President Livingston Barbour, president of Rutger's College at New Brunswick, N. J., Miss Maera Palm of Coshocton has consented to give a talk on "The Educational Value of a Story" before the National Speech Arts Convention to be held in Washington, D. C. during the week beginning June 30.

Adrian Newens, chairman of the literary committee of the association and Miss Margaret Stahl both of whom are known to Coshocton through the Chautauqua and lecture course platforms, are members of the association who will participate in the program.

Miss Palm's friends congratulate her upon the appreciation of her work so evident in the fact that she is urged to appear on the program at the Washington convention. Miss Palm will be a member of the faculty at Denison University during the summer but expects to obtain a leave of absence during the week of the Speech Arts convention.

"Mice and Men" by Senior Class

The promise of "the best class play ever" to be given by the members of the class of 1913 C. H. S. Wednesday evening at the Sixth Street Theatre when the class presents "Mice and Men" is attracting an unusually large crowd of Coshocton people. The play gains its name from Burn's poem "To a Field Mouse."

It has been popular wherever it was given and is perhaps one of the most ambitious amateur theatricals ever attempted by a high school class in Coshocton. Joseph Shepler and Charlotte Burroughs in leading roles are both exceedingly good. In fact, under the able direction of Miss Adah Freeman, every member of the cast is doing excellent work and the play will undoubtedly be a success.

Funds Are Raised for Church Lot

As the result of the rally held Sunday by the congregation of the Shiloh Baptist church the fund being raised for the purchase of a lot and the building of a church was increased to $962. $519 of this sum being raised Sunday and Monday.

The congregation has an option on a lot which can be purchased for $300 and it is probable that the lot will be bought and plans for the building of a church considered in the near future. The building committee is in receipt of numerous other pledges which will materially assist in the furthering of the work

TARIFF FIGHT IN THE SENATE GOES MERRILY ON

Washington, May 31.—"Make the Republicans work" is the slogan adopted by the Democratic leaders of the senate in charge of tariff legislation, who today predicted that the senate would vote on the bill by August 1.

It was made evident today that the fight among the Democrats on the wool and sugar schedules of the bill would be concluded in the caucus, and that this would leave Senators Ransdell and Thornton of Louisiana to vote against the bill because of their opposition to the sugar schedule, and Senator Walsh to oppose it because of free raw wool.

More positive than they have ever been before were the administration leaders today that the bill would come from the finance committee and through the fire of the party caucus, with free raw wool and free sugar in three years remaining unscathed.

But amendments to the sugar and wool schedules will, of course, be offered on the floor of the senate, and the Democrats who will line up avowedly against the bill as it is reported will be expected to vote for them.

Even then the leaders assert the bill can be passed as President Wilson approves it. They admit, however, that it probably will require the vote of Vice President Marshall to pass the bill unless Senator Poindexter, the only avowed Progressive in the senate, votes for the measure.

Increase Cotton Schedule.

Increases in all articles in the cotton schedule that may be classed as luxuries are to be made by the senate finance sub-committee. Members of the committee admitted this today, asserting that expensive cotton table covers, table cloths of finer grades, and tapestry articles all would be raised.

One reduction in the cotton schedule will be made the rate on cotton card laps, roping, sliver or roping being reduced from ten to five per cent. On cotton yarns the duties are to be increased, ten per cent to be taken as the lowest rate, instead of five, and the rates of the Underwood bill to be increased from that basis upward.

COLONEL IS SATISFIED.

Refuses Further Comment On Outcome of Libel Suit.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., June 2.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt arrived home today from Chicago where he spent an hour yesterday after his arrival there from Marquette, Mich. He declined to discuss the outcome of his libel suit against Editor George A. Newett of the Iron Ore of Ishpeming, Mich. "The verdict speaks for itself," was his only comment.

Members of the Roosevelt party said the climax of the case came like the conclusion of a powerful drama. When Editor Newett took the stand and admitted he was mistaken in charging Roosevelt with drunkenness and that all his evidence was hearsay Judge Flannigan who presided immediately instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff which it did without leaving the box. Roosevelt himself requested that he be awarded only nominal damages which was done. He was awarded the nominal damages of 6 cents, provided in such cases by the laws of Michigan. Each party to the suit will have to pay his own expenses.

HAS NEW WITNESSES.

Prosecution Nears Close In Lawrence Dynamite Conspiracy Cases.

Boston, June 2.—Two new and material witnesses, one a man whom District Attorney Pelletier said would prove the meeting between Breen and Ernest Pittman, at Washington and Franklin streets, the night the Lawrence undertaker secured the dynamite to plant in his home city to discredit the textile strikers, and the other a woman, who was said to be able to make important revelations, were on hand when the Wood dynamite conspiracy trial was resumed.

Gen. Miles Not Afraid of the Japs

New York, May 30.—"How do the Japanese and Americans compare as soldiers?" Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., retired head of the American army, was asked today just before he left for Europe.

"They don't compare," the veteran retorted. "We wouldn't have anything to fear if we did have war."

General Miles leaving behind the impression of what he called a "military smack" on the cheek of twelve-year-old Joy Reynolds, sailed today for Europe on the St. Paul. With him went his grand nieces Miss Adena Miles and Mrs. Louis Mitchell and Col. John S. McEwan.

General Miles is going to London to meet his son, Sherman Miles, who is military attache at the court of Rumania. The general did not think much of the prospect of war with Japan.

Running Like Wildfire.

That Mystic Tour Contest is getting to be a dandy. There's a bunch of girls in on the running who are going like thoroughbreds with a prairie fire behind them.

It's a case of heads I win, tails you lose. Last week Marie Daugherty had jumped from third place to first, but this week her two nearest competitors, Dorothy Dawson and Florence Courtright, had reduced her to the ranks again.

Miss Dawson again heads the list and Miss Courtright holds the prize for consistent running, keeping steadily in second place only a shade behind the leader. Already it's "ze one grand race," although the long stretch is still far ahead.

"The Best Man Wins"

For the past two weeks the race has been full of "pep" and a number of the contestants are getting on "to the ropes." The girls are all well known and are energetic and full of enthusiasm. They know that Manager Westfall will give them an absolutely square deal and that whoever wins either a trip or a Mystic pass will do so because she has the most votes.

Corral the Coupons.

The wise ones are now systematizing their efforts for votes. They are overlooking no opportunity, no matter how small. The Tribune coupons are a material factor and several of the contestants are using them to good advantage.

PORFIRIO DIAZ RETURNING HOME

Paris, May 31.—According to a dispatch from Corunna, Spain, the newspaper La Voz de Galicia says General Porfirio Diaz is proceeding to Mexico aboard the French line steamer Espagne.

The Mexican Consul at Corunna, the paper adds, is understood to have received letters addressed to the ex-President aboard that steamer.

A member of the Diaz household in Paris, however, denied to-day that General Diaz is leaving on the Espagne. The former President, he said, had gone on a short visit to his son in the country near Paris.

Better Hosiery Values

That's what you get when you buy

"Onyx"

hosiery. The best because they have stood the test. We have built up a tremendous hosiery business.

There is a reason and one of the strongest reasons so vivid to us, and in fact one which has made our hosiery department always a busy one. We attribute to a large measure to "ONYX" quality. Every pair of ONYX hose carries with it a superior finish not found in any other stocking. Here you will find the different qualities in all the staple colors as black, white and tan, in both regular and out sizes.

No. 484 is one of our big selling stocking in a medium weight lisle with double top absolutely fast in black, white and tan, all sizes at per pair 25c.

No. 489 is a running mate for 484 only it is a gauze lisle weight and comes in the same colors per pair 25c.

No. 419 in Blondin, Russet and tan an unusually gauzy hose, one that will appeal strongly to your hosiery needs per pair 35c or 3 for $1.00.

1114, our pure silk hose with a lisle top, one that will give you the service. This stocking is not to be confounded with the usually advertised silk hose. Your examination will reveal the difference, per pair 50c.

If you want something extra good with an absolute guarantee we can show you

Every Woman's

Lisle hose in white, black or tan, absolutely guaranteed to wear four months. They come 4 pairs in a box for $1 00.

With every box you get a written guarantee of service or new hose. Could any offer be more liberal? Certainly not. Give them a trial and be convinced.

Wheat Crop in Kansas Needs Rain

Wichita, Kan., May 31.—Wheat growers in Southern Kansas and grain buyers in this city estimate that the growing wheat has been set back already 25 per cent by the heat and dry weather of this week. Each succeeding day is proving disastrous.

Estimates from these same sources are to the effect that unless a general rain comes within a few days the 1913 crop will be 50 per cent. shorter of predictions made ten days ago.
